

J.P. Concert Review

Take a jab at this!!!

On Friday June 16, 2000, Casino Rama hosted one of most exciting live boxing matches ever. The 'bad boy' of namely, Hector 'Macho' Camacho entered the ring Tim 'The not so terrible' Bryan in a 10-round middleweight bout.

In a stellar career that has spanned 20 years and counting, Hector 'Macho' Camacho has managed to win world titles ranging in weight from 130 to 160 Lbs. for his solid-gold medallion that reads 'Macho' across his chest. Hector 'Macho' Camacho won his 8th world title and is up the boxing champion scale.

At the start of the fight, Camacho continued to support his role as the 'bad boy' with an aggressive ring style, while he let loose his enthusiastic personality and danced around the ring. Both Tim 'The Terrible' Bryan and Hector 'Macho' Camacho exchanged punches yet, Camacho was clearly the aggressor.

In the second round, Bryan came back into the ring throwing wild low-blow punches, connecting with one of them in the mid-section of Camacho. Although Bryan got in two blows to head of Camacho, which sent the crowd roaring, Camacho came back with a couple of his own popular combinations.

During the third round, Camacho slipped Bryan a few blows to the head and danced around the ring some more, throwing some of Bryan's infamous wild punches. This behaviour invoked some dislike in the crowd for they had begun shouting for a fight between Camacho and Oscar De La Hoya: obviously trying to fuel Camacho's straying fire (Camacho's only four losses have come against Oscar De La Hoya).

Finally, as Camacho regained complete control of the fight, his fire blew Bryan away with a few rights to the head. The bell rang to signal the end of the fight in the fourth round, due to a supposed facial cut on Bryan which called for a technical knock out for Camacho.

Casino Rama was definitely the place to be on Friday night. The 2000 boxing fans came from all over just to enjoy the live event before hitting the casino. Although the loudest cheers went to the ring girls in their bikinis, the event was a success and the fans got their money's worth with five matches on the card.

Much of the success is awarded to Casino Rama and their wonderful P.R. Department. Special thanks to Deborah Crossen and Sherry Lawson, ring announcer Spider Jones, pre-on air entertainment talk show host Larry Silver, transportation for J.P. provided by the Car Rental Place and Joilene Sholtes, what a hit.
